Mather Announces Expanded Leadership Team Adds Wayne Langley, David Murlette as Senior Vice Presidents

Evanston, Ill. (Feb. 12, 2020) – Mather, a 79-year-old not-for-profit organization dedicated to creating Ways to Age WellSM, announces the appointment of two new Senior Vice Presidents to its executive Possibilities Team as part of the organization’s strategy for growth, which includes serving more older adults, enhancing signature programs in areas such as wellness and culinary, and piloting new technologies.

Wayne Langley joins Mather as senior vice president of community initiatives and Mather Institute. He will oversee community resources and identify and bring new programs and practices to older adults in their communities, as well as provide leadership to Mather Institute’s applied research initiatives to support older adults and professionals in senior living and aging services.

David Murlette is Mather’s new senior vice president and managing director of senior living. He oversees the operations of the organization’s senior living residences, including a Life Plan Community in Tysons, Virginia, that is slated to open in 2023.

“We’re thrilled to have Wayne and David join our Possibilities Team,” said Mary Leary, Mather CEO and President. “We look forward to their contributions as we continue to develop a culture of innovation across the organization, from our residences to community-based services, to Mather Institute, and beyond.”

Langley comes to Mather with significant experience in the aging services field, including executive positions with Sodexo, a national contract services company that provides services to senior services providers and as president of a national advertising agency.

Murlette brings a wealth of experience in managing Life Plan Communities across the country, including 12 years as president and CEO at Montereau in Tulsa, Oklahoma, and as a senior vice president with CRSA.
